At the same time. U.S. intelligence sources reported a significant increase in the Communist buildup of war supplies across the border in Laos. Informed sources in Saigon said 15,000 trucks were observed in December hauling eupplies along the Ho Chi Minh Trail through Luos. They said that was the highest number since the months preceding the Communist Tet of-fensive in 1968.

Ready for a Push U.S. intelligence sources in Vietnam's northern provinces report that the North Vietnamese buildup through Laos has reached the point where it is ready to push across the border into Vietnam. Sources said most of the supplies now moving south from North Vieinam on the network of high-speed roads known as the Trail are being stockpiled in forward logis-tical depots located in Laos not far from the South Vietnamese border. It is not clear, sources said, whether the North Vietnamese plan to rush the supplies on to South Vietnamese battlefields for a new campaign or whether they are taking advantage of diminishing monsoon storms to etockpile material for the long haul. Missiles vs. B-52s in Lace SAIGON, Jan. 11 (Reuters).-The

Greeks Set Up Lightning Rods To Protect Ancient Monuments

ATHENS, Jan. 11 (NYT) -Alarmed by the damage often caused by lightning to ancient monuments, the Greek Archaeo-logical Service put aside its esthetic misgivings last week and eet thing rods to protect four historical sites, including the Athens Acropolis.

A 62-foot-tall lighting rod was erected north of the 2,400year-old Parthenon, which crowns the 300-foot Acropolis Hill in the center of Athens

Prof. Spyridon N. Marinatos, inspector general of the archaeological service, said yesterday that the rod utilized a special ionization process that extended the effective protection of the rod over an area with a radius of three times the height of the device. He said the rod would protect all the ancient monuments eurviving on the Acropolis. "The manufacturers have guaranteed the rod for 5,999 years," he said. The need to protect the antiquities from lightning became a matter of concern a year ago, after a bolt hit one of the 22 limestone columns of the Temple of Aphala, built in the 5th century B.C., on Aegina Island, south of Atbens. The column was smashed to gravel-size fragments by the lightning. Only a three-foot etump is now left at the base," said Prof. Marinatos. Other rods have been set up on the Temple of Aphaie, the Temple of Apollo Epicurus at Phigalia, in southern Greece, and on the medieval palace of the Knights of St. John the Hospitalier on Rhodes, and more rods are to be installed at other ancient sites that are particularly susceptible to lightning, he said.

By Victor Louis MOSCOW.—For many years, the thousands of Republican refugees who settled in the Soviet Union after the Spanish Civil War were the only foreigners Russians could mix with to satisfy their curiosity about the outside world. Yet, Spain was the only one of the larger countries of Europe which was cut off from direct relations with the Soviet Union. While this is still true to a great extent, a change seems to be in the air. When I landed in Barcelona, no one was astonished by my Soviet passport, but as I eagerly sought out the bright corrida poster, I was the one to be surprised to see street corners with posters advertising the Ukrainian Cossack Ensemble from Kiev, and later in Madrid, to see Soviet flags decorating the show window of a camera shop.

For three decades, Generalis-simo Francisco Franco was a fine target for Soviet cartoonists, but now he is growing old. Perhaps because he would look rather miserable holding his traditional axe dripping with blood, he has disappeared from

Nor is there any reason to attack his newly designated successor, Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon. After all, the Soviet Union is coexisting peacefully with many other royal

It is not expected that Soviet-Spanish diplomatic relations will suddenly be renewed. But establishment of consular ties with Poland and Romania and the growing trade between Spain and Eastern Europe are reliable barometer readings.

Spanish trade with Eastern Europe neared $150 million last year, a sizable figure built np since 1967, when the first commercial egreement was signed with Poland.

For the time being, the Soviet Union has limited itself to a merchant marine representation in Spain. The Soviet news agency Tass is seeking to open a Madrid office, and the other Soviet news agency, Novosti, appears to be contemplating the exchange of information with Spain's Pyresa agency.

Trade began indirectly between the two countries, using a third country as intermediary. It has since become less secretive and broader. The Russians sell Spain building and farm machinery and participate in the Barcelona trade fair. In turn, a number of Spanish shoe firms have just won valuable contracts at a footwear exhibi-tion in Moscow.

Trawlers at Port

The port of Las Palmas in the Canary Islands off the north Atlantic coast of Africa has heen rapidly rebuilt to accom-modate 200 Russian fishing trawlers.

A Soviet cruise ship has begun to call at the Spanish Mediterranean island of Maforce. The souvenir shore there seem understandably pleased to get the brief visits of Soviet tourists. They are more prized then the Germans or Scandinavians because they are naive enough to buy cheap, gandy goods with enthusiasm.

Some locals are even beginning to learn Russian and there are advertisements in the English-language Majorca Daily Bulletin guaranteeing quick results from a mini-Russian Course. About 4.000 Spaniards . who settled in Russia after the Spanish Civil War have returned to Spain, some with Russian The more relaxed atmosphere and dancers and to officiel trips, too. Following Moscow visits by the chief editor of Spain's EFE news agency and of the Spanish deputy minister of information and tourism, the senior surgeon of Madrid's La Paz hospital, Dr. Christobal Martinez Bordiu, the marquis of Villaverde, will come to Russia to compare notes with Soviet colleagues.

Even more interesting than the medical contact is that he may come with his wife, who is Gen. Franco's daughter.

Moscow-Madrid Bus

It is clear that after completely ignoring each other, the two countries are now trying to make contact in a variety of fields. There are expected to be Moscow-Madrid bus tours. The Spanish railroad is interested in running through-trains to Moscow.

The main attraction of modern Spain for the Seviet Union, however, is its changing international policy. Many Spanish politicians speak of Spain's role in Europe; they approve Charles de Gaulle's dreams of a great France; they criticize Britain over Gibraltar. But so long as Spain has no diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union, its voice will carry little weight with its closer neighbors.

Soviet support in the United Nations of Spain's claim to Gibraltar created a stir in Madrid, and the openly anti-American attitude of many influential Spaniards and their desire to re-enter European politics without U.S. backing will, of course, be greeted with sympathy by the Soviet Union.

Soviet-Spanish Diplomatic Ties?

La Pasionaria Is Still a Factor MOSCOW, Jan. 11 (WP)—"Diplomatic relations between Moscow and Madrid? that depends on who dies first, Franco er Dolores Ibarruri."

This comment by a Soviet source referred to Dolores Ibarruri, La Pasionaria of the Spanish Civil War, still active in Moscow as head of the Spanish Communist party.

"They shall not pass," she said of the Franco forces. But they won the Spanish Civil War more than 30 years ago, and today Spaniards and Russians do pass each other's borders. The two countries say they are poles apart ideblogically, but each has found ways of making its ideology accommodate strange

Some Westerners suggest that a greater obstacle to Hispano-Soviet rapprochement might be the gold that the Loyalist govern-ment sent to Odessa in 1937. The Spaniards said then it was sent partly in safekeeping for the republic. Soviet sources now say that Moscow regarded it all as payment for arms, and that it is not negotiable.

Even so, in 1966 the Spanish Catholic newspaper Ya urged establishment of diplomatic relations between Madrid and Moscow.

Nixon Gets Early Start on Vital Decisions

By Max Frankel

WASHINGTON (NYT).—It looked like a sleepy little village, hibernating, perhaps, with the President and the Congress away and all the civil servants still recuperating from the holidays. When they went to lunch here, they were just leaving breakfast out in San Clemente, and with the heart of the White House out of touch so much it was almost the strain. out of mind. But it was a deceptive calm; the momentous months of the Nixon administration are at hand.

Presumably refreshed and refueled, the President flew back to town Thursday to mark the end of the year in which he was 56 years old and still the new boy in the White House. From now on, the budget, tha inflation, the war and the priorities will be his, not, of course, in truth, but in fact. Before his next birthday, he will have been judged not by wbat be has proposed and planned but by what he has done. It is quite a leap.

The Pentagon was popping again with alarms about the Soviet missile buildup while the elite corps of arms-control experts planned their next and probably decisive approaches to the Russians. The Treasury was scraping at the bottom of the revenue barrel to belance a stingy but nonetheless bloated budget while the economists juggled very real fears that the year could bring both deeper recession and continued inflation.

The My Lai saga took a sordid new turn as two soldiers faced charges of rape as well as murder. The war in Vietnam moved toward a crucial test of both enemy intentions and allied capacities before the full commitment to American disengagement from combat.

Mr. Nixon's bold new proposal for welfare reform and family assistance to the working poor-fought out in his own councils for nearly six months of his first year-faced the real risk of swift emasculation in the House while both liberal and conservativa Democrats questioned its political value to them. And even in the holiday histus, the President and Congress were shouting threats of veto and retribution over the still unpassed appropriations for monies spent on health and education since last July.

The President returned to make another fateful choice of a nominee for the Supreme Court and to face a military request that he seek a new round of deployment of the anti-missile missile—issues that consumed most of his political energies here last year.

Small wonder, then, that Mr. Nixon returned early to the capital to plan his approach to the returning and now election-minded Congress, to sort out the remaining choices of priority in his budget and legislative program and, according to all reports, to shore up the rbetoric of his reign.

He was revealed last week to be fighting the narcotics traffic at the source abroad and he has suggested some new anti-crime measures to the legislators, but he must also position himself to blame the continuing increase in crime on the Democrats. He is plainly con-fident that his manipulation of the economy will work out all right by the end of the year, bot that falling, he must also portray him-self as the legatee of the opposition's mess.

Stage Set for New Safeguard Battle Between Pentagon and ABM Foes in Senate

By William Beecher

WASHINGTON (NYT).—The stage was being set last week for a return matter tween the administration and a substantial element of the Senate over the controversial question of missile defense.

Only last August, after one of the most bitter executive-legislative battles in recent memory, President Nixon staggered away from the contest with a one-vote victory, enabling him to start deployment of Safeguard anti-ballistic missiles around two Minuteman missile complexes in the North-

Now the administration ha. tentatively decided to ask for an expansion of that system. On returning from vacation last weekend, Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird stated categorically: "We'll ask for some parts of [the expanded Safeguard] program in the 1971 budget, but you'll have to wait until the budget message is sent to tha Congress by the President" for

But by midweek, perhaps stung by critical editorial com-ment that the Pentagon seemed to have prejudged the matter. Mr. Laird said that a "final decision" would be made only after the issue had been taken before the National Security Council and the President.

Request Expected

As of now it appears that the principal issues that will be joined if Mr. Nixon asks, as expected, for an additional $1.5 billion for missile defense are

Will a move to expand

Safeguard, now that the United States and Russia have made an encouraging start on talks aimed at limiting offensive and defensive weapons help or hinder that effort?

• Are the growing threats of Russian and Communist Chinese missile systems suffi-cient to call for new defensive measures at this time?

 Does the administration have a persuasive case for expansion, or is Safeguard essentially a weapon in search of a

The last question stems from the difficulty within government of deciding whether to add more defense around Minuteman sites, start to erect 1 e defense of the entire nation against the light-missile attack China is expected to be capable of launching by the mid-1970s,

When the Johnson administration first opted for missile defense in 1967, it stressed de-fense against China. The Nixon administration, after a lengthy review, decided to begin the defense instead against a pos-sible Russian surprise attack against Minuteman silos. If it now turns round and seeks a China orientation, it can expect to be accused of flip-flop think-

Some key Pentagon officials were urging that a logical sec-ond step in the Safeguard pro-gram would be to build one or more defensive sites along the northern border of the United States against the budding Chinese missile threat. Since even in a comprehensive arms-control agreement both the United States and Russia would prob-ably insist on the right to have light defenses against Chinese missiles, they argued, such a step could hardly be provocative. But other officials saw the Soviet missile buildup as posing a more imminent threat and urged that the stress be on more protection for Minuteman sites.

Mr. Laird seemed to be siding with this second school of thought when, at a press con-ference last week, he said that the Soviet buildup of giant SS-9 missiles was going faster than he had predicted last spring, during the first Safeguard debate. Rather than fearing an SS-9 force capable of destroying 95 percent of the 1,000 Minuteman missiles by 1974, he said, such a force may be on hand even earlier if the construction rate continues.

Unless an arms-control agreement or Soviet self-restraint curbs this buildup, he warned, the United States may build advanced Polaris-type subma-rines and new strategic bombers. The Chinese, he said, continue their missile program on a schedule that may give them anywhere from 15 to 40 long-range missiles hetween 1976 and 1978. Meanwhile, Safeguard, because of the delay in final congressional authorization of building funds, has fallen six months behind the schedule that aimed at making the first two sites operational by 1976, he

Despité Repeated Clarifications

Nixon's Asia Policy Still Unclear

By John W. Finney

WASHINGTON (NYT).—II one were looking for conceptual turning points in the long course of American involvement in Asia, they might be found in two presidential "backgrounders"-one held by Presidenl McKinley, tormented over his decision to turn the Philippines inlo an American colony. and the other held 70 years later by President Nixon, tormented by an American war in

Shortly before he was essassmated, President McKinley confided to a group of Methodist Epscopal missionaries that his conscience had been deeply torn over the annexation of the Philippines until in prayer he received divine guidance that "there was nothing left for us to do but to take them all, and to educate the Filipinos, and uplit and civilize them, as our fellow men for whom Christ

ako died." Last summer in an auditorium on Guam, President Nixon ruminated to reporters about the future American responsibility in Asia. The United States, as he conceives it, should contime to play a significant role as a Pacific power but should avoid being dragged into future wars on the Asian mainland.

Out of Asia

Mr. McKinley's divine guidaucc gave satisfaction to on ex-parasionist, "little brown brother" doctrine—one that had really been evolving ever since the Salem merchants set forth to make their fortunes in trade with China—that led to the massive American involvement in the 20th century in Asia. Out of the Nixon meditations last July croived what has come to be known as the Nixon Doctrine, which ostensibly is supposed to lead the United States out of Asia as a military power.

In his Vicinam speech on Nov. 3. Mr. Nixon described his new doctrine as "a major shift in U.S. foreign policy." In practical terms, however, it still remains unclear just how the doctrine will change American involvement in Asia, or for that matter exactly what the doctrine means.

Confusion over the Nixon Doctrine was underscored has week by Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew's lour through Asia, ostensibly lo explain the doctrine to his Asian hosts. Perhaps nothing better illustrated the confusion than Mr. Agnew's own statements; depending upon his aodience, he emphasized one feature of the doctrine one day, another not necessarily comple-mentary feature the next day.

Part of the confusion stems from the peculiar way that President Nixon chose to announce a major shift in American foreign policy. From all that can be gathered, there was no elaborate staff work in advance, no carefully prepared position paper such as normally precedes a major policy pronouncement. Rather, the President announced the policy in a discursive news conference on an island in the Pacific and under the noncommittal terms that his statements could not be quoted directly.

Mansfield Role

The role of defining and embellishing the Nixon Doctrine befell Sen. Mike Mansfield, D., Mont, to he point thet some wags on Capitol Hill are suggesting that it should be more properly called the "Nixon-Mansfield Doctrine." After a trip to Asia last August at the request of the President, Sen. Mansfield issued a report defin-ing the doctrine for the first time-at least as it was interpreted by the senator from Montana. There is good reason to believe that Sen. Mansfield was speaking on the basis of presidential guidance when he said in his report that the doctrine meant that, while the United States "will maintain its treaty commitments, it is anticipated that Asian nations will be able to handle their own defense problems, perhaps with some outside material assitance but without outside manpower."

The inherent difficulty with such definitions through a senatorial interlocutor is that the senator, particularly one who, like Sen. Mansfield, is so opposed to the Vietnam war, may read more into the doctrine than was intended by the President. Thus last week, Sen. Mansfield seemed to be broadening the doctrine beyond edministration ini.ntion — and certainly beyond what Mr. Agnew seemen to be saying in Asia -when he said that the doctrine means "the United States is primarily a Pacific power with only peripheral interest on the Asian mainland." In defining the future American military role in Asia, Sen. Mansfield said the doctrine means: "That we did not intend to become involved there on a combat basis anymore, and that to our friends we would give logistical and economic support: the only way in which we would ever become involved again would be when our security was at stake and a nuclear showdown appeared to be in the offing—in other words when there was no possible choice."

Basic Question

But if American interests in Asia are only "peripheral," when would American security be at stake in the event of an insurgency or invasion in Asia?

a still broader interpretation offered by Sen. James B. Pearson, R., Kan., after a meeting with the President in November. Sen. Pearson announced in a statement that the doctrine was not meant to apply just to Asia, but to the world at large.

Whatever may have been President Nixon's original intentions—and there are indicatire was simply to encourage a little less dependency upon the United States by Asian allies— the Nixon Doctrine gained such favorable currency on Capitol Hill that by November tha President was proclaiming the doctrine, as defined by Sen. Mansfield, to be his own. Thus, in his Nov. 3 speech, he said that the doctrine set forth the following three principles as guidelines for future American

But to Sen, Mansfield, if the doctrine is to have any meaning, there should be a reduction in the U.S. military presence in South-east Asia. But that is a step, particularly after the Agnew trip, that the administration shows no sign of taking.

Agnew Sticks to Script on His Asian Tour

By James M. Naughton

SINGAPORE (NYT).-When O Vice-President Spiro T.: Agnew and his entourage swept into Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, last week, the American Em-bassy there handed out a list "special rules of courtesy to be observed with Muslims."
Among the items in the "Don't" column was one warning: "Never place one's foot or feet on a table or desk when talking to guests."

Mr. Agnew did not put his feet on the table in Malaysia. Nor for that matter in any of the eight nations he has swooped down on so far in his 11nation tour of Asia. As one of the officials traveling with his party put it, "The Vice-Presi-dent is sticking right to the script."

In this case, the script was written on Guam last July by President Nixon and it is called the Nixon Doctrine. The President sent Mr. Agnew to East Asia and the Pacific to explain what it meant.

There has been a good deal of confusion about the doctrine ever since Mr. Nixon pronounced it. As announced by the President and repeated by the Vice-President abroad, its three ingredients are (1) an "unequivocal" statement that the United States will keep its com-mitments to its allies; (2) a protective nuclear shield placed over the Pacific by America to ward off any major power threat to our allies; and (8) a stipulation that the allies must assume more responsibility for handling their own internal prob-

Almost from the moment it was announced, anti-war spokesman at home pounced upon the last element as a hopeful sign that the United States would withdraw from entanglements in the Pacific that might lead to another Vietnam. But ever since he landed on Dec. 29 in Manila, where Adm. Dewey had set a precedent for American power in the Pacific, Mr. Agnew hegan emphasizing the first two aspects for the benefit of leaders in the Philip-pines, South Vietnam, Taiwan, Thalland, Malaysia and Singapore. He will do the same this week in Indonesia, Australia and New Zealand. And even in landlocked Nepal and Afghanistan, neutral nations sandwiched among giant powers, Mr. Agnew emphasized U.S. intentions to eep an oar in the Pacific.

By the time he had talked his way through the first eight countries, Mr. Agnew was confident of success. He stood late last week outside the U.S. ambassador's residence in Singapore and told 200 applauding American residents that the Nixon Doctrine had "struck a responsive note. We have found understanding of the new American posture and a reas-sured feeling the United States is not going to turn its back on

Mr. Agnew's emphasis on the American presence in the Pacific may raise some eyebrows in Washington, but the Vice-President had a ready explanation for that. "The people back home don't understand as well as they might what's actually going on in Asian countries and what the American presence means," he said. "I can say that because I didn't understand myself until this trip."

If the doctrine has become clear to Mr. Agnew, it was still questionable whether his confidence that the allies were reassured was well placed. The Vice-President'e Air Force jet was leaving a wake of contradictory reactions.

In Malaysia, Prime Minister Tunku Abdul Rahman said that Mr. Agnew had convinced him "the United States is not going to leave us in the lurch. It is prepared to spread its umbrella for the security of the region." The same night, however, the prime minister dropped from his speech at a state dinner a line which said Malaysia "can expect help in the event of unprovoked aggression by enemies from without who have sinister designs against us." The impresion among many observers was that Mr. Rahman may have switched his signals in sudden realization that he had nothing on paper to show a U.S. commitment to help defend his country.

In Taiwan, America is firmly committed to help the Na-tionalist Chinese in case of atnewspapers on Taiwan were voicing skepticism in editorials, such as one which called Mr. Agnew's reassurances "empty and perfunctory."

In Thailand, where there is considerable concern that an American withdrawal from Viet-Communist subversion in both Laos and Thailand, officials remain jittery following the Vice-President's visit. On balance, therefore, Mr. Agreewe attempts to clear up any misconceptions abroad about the Nixon Doctrine did not seem to have been wholly successful. In fact, one member of the Vice-President'e party conceded in private conversations that there was a deliberate intention on the administration's part to keep the doctrine somewhat fuzzy. He said that the vagaries of the plan to pull out gradually from Vietnam and the generalized pledges of American support in Asia would keep options open, preventing the enemy from any precipitate action based on a clearcut of chilling the favorable atmosphere developed at the arms-control taiks in Helsinki, jeopar-dizing a potentially historic agreement to halt the arms race the understanding that these by rushing into further weapons deployment just as progress looks promising? Such a question has indeed been raised within administration councils, by officials of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. But other officials, particularly at the Pentagon, argue that if the United States unilaterally holds back from doing what it was expected to do in this field—especially when the Russians continue to expand their offensive missile forces and to test advanced defensive mis-

Mr. Thieu's manner and posi-tion was tough and uncompromising:

 On the prospect for further American - troop withdrawals, Mr. Thieu said it would be "impossible and impractical" for all American combat troops to be withdrawn from South Vietnam in 1970. "We need time for training and we need equip-ment from the United States." he said. "I never believed that all the [combat] troops would be withdrawn in 1970 ... It will take many years."

To List Aid Needs

On the need for continued and increased American assist ance: Mr. Thieu said he was making up a list to submit to the American government "not only of military equipment but also of funds and most particu-larly the material help to improve the living conditions of Vietnamese soldiers and their families." South Vietnamese cooperation with further American withdrawals, he said, would hinge on the fulfillment of this list of requests.

• On the prospects for a coalition government: "A coalition government means death. the president said, bringing his fist down on the table for emnhasis. "The men who favor a coalition work for the Communists. It is an enemy trick to overthrow this government and impose a Communist regime."

Lebanon Slowly Slides Toward Upheaval

By Dana Adams Schmidt

BERUT (NYT).—There is a sense in Lebanon of inexo-The fear is of a progression of events under which increased action by Palestinian guerrillas based on Lebanese soil would be followed by increased Isracii reprisais against Lebanon, resulting in drastic political repercussions in Belrut.

Although - some right-wing Christian politicians still talk in public as though Lebanon could halt guerrilla operations against Israel or force the guerrillas out of the country, other observers say that these are no longer realistic prospects. The most that can be expected is that the Lebanese government and army would in some ways limit these operations. That is what the 13-day war late last year between the Lebanese Army and the guerrillas—and the Nov. 3 agreement between themwere all about The agreement reached through Egyptian fatercossion, restricted the border area in which the guerrillas

Tast week, after a new escalation of the border war-a guerrilla raid on the Israeli village of Metulish and the kidnapping of an Israeli guard, followed by Israeli reprisals in which 22 Lebanese were abducted—the agreement was refined.

The guarrilles promised not to shoot across the border. They were to endeavor to penetrate inside Esrael before setting up their rockets or mortars, thereby -so the reasoning went-avoiding immediate reprisals against Lehanese territory.

To Move Camps

The guerrillas were to avoid setting up their camps closer than 500 to 1,000 yards from any Lebanese town, thus reducing the chances of Israeli air raids against the villages. The guerrillas also agreed to halt military training in the refugee camps, many of which are situsted in densely populated areas and which could by virtue of the military training become targets for Israeli action.

The whole purpose, clearly, was not to prevent guerrilla forays into Israel but to prevent Lebanese from getting hurt by Israeli reprisals. The ousterlast week of the Lebanese commander-in-chief, Maj. Gen. Emile Bustani, and his replacement by Maj. Gen. Jean Njaire. was the government's way of telling the guerrillas that it meant to enforce these limits. tions. Gen. Njaim is expected to be tougher than his predecessor in dealing with the guerrillas (and tougher with the Israelis, too).

But there is another question to take into account. Considering how few incidents have taken place on the Lebanese border facing upper Galilee, compared with the constant sion of events on the Jor-danian border, and in spite of the fact that the wooded agricultural terrain favors guerrilla action and that the Israel agricultural and industrial targets are inviting, it seems possible that el-Fatah, the pringuerfile. organization by Yessir Arafat, is actually exercising restraint. restraint could be motivated either by some kind of agreement, tactt or otherwise, related to the Nov. 3 accord. or it could be simply that el-Fatah leaders have calculated that escalation of the sequence of guerrilla raids and Israeli- reprisals on the Lebanese border would have political conseguences in Beirut contrary to guerrille interests.

Lebanese Opposition

The guerille leaders spparently realize that in con-Jordan, they are opposed in this country by significant portions of the population, mainly Christians and right-wingers. They may have drawn the conclusion that they had better move slowly if they want to avoid bringing Lebanon's political bouse down

Escalation on the border could again lead to demonstrations in the universities and on the streets by uncontrollable leftwingers demanding a more forceful. Lebanese government policy. As happened last October casualties could again lead to the fall of the Lebanese government and, if the armed right-wing groups would inter-vene, there sould be civil war. In such an event a military regime would be likely to take over and impose stricter con-trols. The guerrillas would probably find themselves under government pressures

On the whole, however, the trend of events is unmistakably toward more active confrontation on the Lebanese border. The Christian Lebanese, who feel more Lebauese than Arab, can no longer keep Lebanon: out of the Arab front

The Christians had put on the brakes in the form of a war with the guerrillas and in the form of restrictions on when and how they could operate But the brakes are wearing thin

In recognizing the guerrills presence in Lebanon, the Cairo agreement set in motion forces technical limitations on guerrilla activity. These forces include the following: The persistence of the guerrilla organizations which gave way to pressures at one point only to reappear at two others; the persistence of the guerrilla mystique, which means different things to Arabs of differing political views, but which few would call meaningless; the simple popularity of guerrilla exploits.

Trading With Communists Isn't Sin Any Longer

By Edwin L. Dale Jr. WASHINGTON ONT).-"Mr. President, this is the first significant trade liberalization measure passed by Congress since the end of World War II." The words were those of Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D., Minn., prior to the very last act. of Congress before it adjournedpassage of a wholly revised law governing control of exports of U.S. goods to Communist countries. Sen. Mondale had led the fight for a greatly liberalized hw, and he was pleased, thoughhe did not get all he wanted: "It may be that (the law's) symbolism is even more importent (than its terms)." A Long Struggle

There was no doubt whatever about the congressional intent in the final version of the legisfation, which had been the sub-ject of a long struggle. The intent was to blosen the present controls over many of the 1,800 esterories of products that can-not he sold strall to the Soviet Union and the other European Communist countries.

By coincidence, passage of the new export control law, to replace the 20-year-old statute that was due to expire, follow-ed by only a few days a presi-dential decision also relating to trade with Communist countries. though it had different-motives. President Nixon ruled that henceforth subsidiaries of American companies located shroad can trade with China, provided they do not bring the Chinese goods to the United States. (All direct trade by Americans with Chins, North Kores and North Vietnam remained banned)

The purpose of that move was essentially political to make a small gesture in the direction of ending the long-standing freeze in U.S.-Chinese relations. There was an incidental benefit of clearing up a point of friction with Canada, where many American subsidiaries are located. But the purpose of the changes in the export control law was strictly economic to sell more American goods and the change was actually opposed at first by the administra-

What happened essentially

LONDON (NYT).—Britons have been in the grip of a dreary cold spell but, for the government, it might as well be spring. For the Labor gov-ernment is reaping world aclaim for what appears to be the spectscular success of its tough comomic measures. Britain is recovering and last week Hoy Jenkins, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was in the United States telling American businessmen that his country "entered a period of strength in our balance of pay-in years." The first rewards so far for the "hard slog" toward economic health were meted out to the British in what the press here was that American businessmen persuaded a sufficient number of important members of Congress that the existing situation was absurd. Nations such as West Germany, Italy, Britain, France and Japan were doing a good business with East Europe in the very goods that U.S. exporters either could not sell at all under the regulations or red tape required before they might be allowed to sell. There is no doubt that the new U.S. law should lead to some relaxation of controls and probably to more exports. First, the Commerce Department must review the entire present con-

did not want to go through the items that have no real national security importance, and that review was under way last week. Second, it must in the future take account of availability of non-Communist country before a control can be imposed.

But perhaps most important, the whole psychology of the law has been changed. Congress has now said it is good, not bad, to sell goods to Communist comtries except those of a clear strategic importance. Thus a great many more American terest themselves in this trade. How much will exports expand? No one can say for cer-tain. But the main obstacle may turn out to be the ancient truth that trade is a two-way street. Congress has done nothing to reduce the extra-high tariffs on goods from Communist countries, and thus there is no early prospect of a big increase in U.S. imports.

Communist countries, and the Soviet Union in particular, try to balance their trade with individual Western countries. And because the state does all the buying, they can do so. ments such as we have not had Lifting the 3 1/2-year-old travel allowance limit of $120, the government announced that Britans could now go abroad on vacation and virtually spend what they like in foreign currency. "Apart from pleasing the travelers, the decision re-flected some confidence here that the ressive swing in the trade figures is here to stay for a while. The vital balance between what Britain spends abroad and what she carns broad has moved into substantiel surplus.

In the first nine months of 1969, the balance of payments on current account showed a cumulative surplus of $540-mil-lion, following deficits of about $1-billion in each of the last two years. And the immediate target of a $720-million surplus

March seems well within reach.
The effect of the turnaround has helped to bring some calm to the international monetary scene, has strengthened Britain's position for the coming talks on entering the Common Market and, of course, has improved the chances of the embattled Labor government at the next genera elections, which must be held before the spring of 1971. Assuming the success lasts, it also raises the question: How did Britain do it?

It was achieved by a combination of a tough economic squeeze on Britons—higher interest rates and taxes, price and .. wage guidelines, curbs on installment buying-coupled with the 1967 devaluation of the pound from $2.80 to $2.40, and booming world trade. Devaluation made British goods cheaper to foreign buyers and foreign goods more expensive to British consumers, already under ressure to hold down consumption. In the period since the devaluation. volume of exports has risen twice as fast as that of imports.

The still unanswered question is whether the recovery and the euphoria among many government planners will contimue. The memory still lives of false hopes raised by the brief surplus in 1966, and mounting wage demands could well upset the current trend. There are many here who know that Britain's worries are far from over, particularly in view of the continuing problems of free-wheeling unions, outmoded and inefficient industrial production methods, and the rising domestic pressure for relaxation of the economic squeezes.

For a bank to do its job these days, it has to be where its customers do business.

But it's not only the number of locations that's important. It's where those facilities are placed. And the kind of local and international coverage they offer.

In Europe, for example, Continental Bank has fullservice branches serving the major money market centers.

These, plus our affiliates and representative offices, create a network which covers every Common Market country (in addition to England, Spain, and Switzerland).

An End in Biafra?

Dialogue With Peking

The Biafran rebellion has demonstrated, —is the task confronting most African so often, its amazing vitality in the face of apparent disaster that even the current rout must be regarded with a certain caution. Assuming, however, that the Nigerian government forces have triumphed, what does the future hold for the defeated?

Hunger, on a massive scale, almost certainly, even though food relief will be made available as soon as it can be rushed to the survivors. Octrages by the victorious troops seem virtually inevitable, given the bitterness of tribal rivalry, enhanced by the long, bloody war. It is the scale of these impending "incidents" rather than the fact of Biafra's collapse which has so alarmed opinion in the world outside. And then?

The problem before Nigeria, as before so many other African states, is to make a nation out of the tribal miscellany which was one of imperialism's most dangerous legacies to the continent. The common cultural inheritance which is the soundest basis for a nation has, in Africa, been perverted by the imposition of alien cultures thinly over chance collections of ancient tribes and kingdoms, in aggregations which are neither economically nor geographically sensible. Awareness of this, and of its capability for producing an almost infinite fissioning of tribal nuclei, is what has given the Nigerian government so much support from other African governments.

states. They must accomplish, in sum, what the Hapsburg dynasty failed to do in Ecrope. The rational argument behind the central government'e efforts as in Congo-Kinshasa, Nigeria, and, all too probably, in Kenya-is that if the country is held together by force, initially (as was done, for example, in the American Civil War) it will survive to permit the growth of nationhood. But this could easily mean the dominance of one or two tribes over the rest-like the German and Hungarian dominance over the rest of Acetro-Hungary's peoples-with all the continuing strains and eventual collapse this implies.

Can etatesmanship conquer tribalism in Nigeria? That remains to be eeen. Much depends on the way in which starvation and passion are combatted in the first days and weeks following the collapse of organized resistance in Biafra. But whatever idea rules Nigeria in the years to come, whatever statoes are raised to the victorious, whatever loyalties are cherished to the brave defeated, there is one symbol that neither Nigeria nor the world can ever permit themselves to forget. It is the huge, bewildered eyes of a child, staring from over stringy limbs and a distended belly—the innocent, ignorant victim of a mystique it never knew, an idea which meant nothing except the pain of hunger, and death. During the Second World War many American soldiers were court-martialed and severely punished for violating these very same laws of war, and the fact that we are now racial feelings or the callouses of fighting in Asia instead of Europe war rendered our troops generally is hardly a worthy basis for suspending their operation.

There are, however, features of the Vietnam conflict which make some of the rules unusually dif-ficult of application. No front line separates ally from enemy; the ter-rain lends itself to clandestine operations; women and children frequently participate; South and North Vietnamese do not label themselves as such, and individuals the yellow race are hard for our soldiers to identify. the Army Field Manual.

Superior orders can, however, be invoked by the soldier uninformed about the military situation who relies on the judgment of his com-mander and is most subject to the pressures of discipline. If such a defense is accepted for a sergeant or lieutenant, however, the consequence is not the elimination of responsibility for what happened, but an upward shift in its locus. It would stuitify the whole system to exculpate the underling who followed orders and ignore superiors who gave them.

In confused and shifting circumstances such as the Vietnam war presents, the responsibility of the higher officers for training, doctrine, and practice is, because of those factors, all the greater. It is a pertinent if touchy recollection that, after the Second World War, the Japanese General Yamashita was condemned to death by a court of senior American officers not for what he himself did, but for failing to give and enforce orders to check the excesses of his troops.

If in fact My Lai was a massacre, was it an isolated episode or symptomatic of a diseased command structure? Are we now unable or unwilling to distinguish friend from foe with reasonable approximation? By what standards are the so-called "free-fire zones" determined, and what has their consequence? Have war rendered our troops generally indifferent to the welfare of the Vietnamese people? Are our generals so immersed in the bus of war that they are blind to our announced goals in Vietnam?

It is our government and those who have supported its policy that most need to resolve these ques-tions, little as this appears to be realized. However persussive the original justifications for the Vietnam venture may have been, they cannot survive a system under which our friends are in as much danger from American military power as are those against whom it is supposed to be a protection.

swering questions, and in other ways trying to defend his position. All this uses up a great deal of time and energy and doesn't seem to calm the controversy. The United States and Israel differ about the Middle East crisis because their national interests differ in many ways. Tel Aviv is not going to accept the Rogers formula and Washington is not going to accept the Israeli government's for-mula, bot at least they ought to be able to make clear what they are disagreeing about,

It is hard enough to live with the unavoidable conflicts between nations, but to put up with avoidable stupidities is intolerable. The Rogers formula is not some vague or casual suggestion. It has been put on paper and widely circulated. It may be sensible or silly, but at least it is precise and should be published, so that the people who are being asked to have a judgment on it will have the facts.

This is not one of those cases where publicity will embarrass or confound diplomacy. All the documents in the Rogers formula have been made available to Israel and the United Arab Republic, and to the Soviet Union, Britain, France, Italy the Netherlands, Denmark, Jordan, Morocco, Tunisia, Syria, Saudi Arabia and also, among others, to Marshal Tito of Yugo alavia, who is going to see President Nasser in Cairo next month.

Why Secrecy?

So why the secrecy? The Rogers speech on the subject last monthon the Middle East, and the State Department documents in the case were discussed in the National Security Council in the White House and approved personally by President Nixon before they were Almost everybody concerned and

The Israelis, disillusioned by their experience with John Foster Dulles in the 1957 Middle Eastern orisis, are giving the impression that Sec-retary Rogers is trying to "imas he has actually proposed to leave the main questions of boundaries, refugees and security to negotiation between the Israelis and the Arabs.

The Real Questions

As a result, even the common interests of the United States and Israel are now being blurred by the peripheral arguments over Secretary Rogers's proposals. Beyond the Rogers formula are the real questions of Middle Bast security and the balance of power in the esstern Mediterranean betwee Soviet Union and the United States. But this larger question of power at the crossroads of the continents of Europe, Africa and Asia is not the underbrush of these secondary questions is cleared away. and an average life of 8 years, costs the company 9.54 percent on a semi-annual payment basis.

Assuming the same set of circomstances for an offering at 8 3/4 at 98—and there were some in this range at the end of 1969 and the cost to the company rises fractionally to 9.57 percent. At 9 3/4 percent at 97, the company's cost reaches Take it from the investor's side. Say he has a choice of buying the 9 percent bond at 99 1/2 or the 8 3/4 percent bond at 98. If he holds on to it for life, the 9 percent bond will yield him 9.09 percent and the 8 3/4 percent one will yield him slightly more, or 9.11 percent. But if he plans to hold it on a short-term basis, the current yield on the 9 percent will amount to 9.05 on a yearly basis, while the yield on the 3 3/4 issue is only 8.93 percent. One problem with the 9 per-centers, of course, is that it is hard for the company to convince stockholders that the money has been raised at better terms than lesser-coupon issues. On the other hand, some, perhaps most, of the demand for the 9 percent compons may be due to the fact that it is equally hard to convince an individual investor that he may be doing better with a lower coupon but better pricing.

As one market source put it. the differentials here amount to the same "optics advantage" that you get in marking the price of a dress $7.99 instead of There are few buyers who really care about the extra penny, but the lower price tag appeals to that human, bergainhunting element.

N.Y. Stock Averages Decline, Trading Is Light;

Another quick sellout was the Commonwealth Edison $100 million bond issue at a yield of 8.44 percent on Thursday. Treasury Bonds

The week's trend in the Treasury bond market contrasted with the better price tone in the corporate market. The decline in outstanding Treasury issues was caused by the realization that Washington will soon have to announce how it intends to refinance $4.38 billion of 4 percent bonds maturing on Feb. 15 and possibly the $2.28 billion of 2 1/2s coming due in March.

To persuade holders of the issues to switch into new goverument securities, the Treasury will have to offer attractive yields a prospect that is help-ing keep yields high on the out-standing U.S. securities.

Neither the bond market nor the stock market paid much attention to the statement last Tuesday by Secretary of Labor George P. Shultz that the Federal Reserve should move to relax somewhat its extremely restrictive monetary policy. He said the economy "needs restraint but not a stranglehold." It was the strongest statement yet from administration sources on the subject of appropriate monetary policy, but the finan-cial markets appeared to believe the Fed is not likely to be influenced soon.

Because of the reduced sales, Chrysler last week laid off 2,200 car plant workers for an indefinite period. The company had laid off some workers last month and has been closing its car plants a week at a time to cut production.

General Motors has been taking similar action to hold down

Bonds in Demand Despite Interest-Rate Drop output. The company laid off 3,800 at the end of the year and said it would be closing a dozen plants for two days each to hold down output. The plant closedowns caused a drop of more than 14 percent in the auto assemblies last month and indicate a decline of about 20 percent for January. The Argus Research Corp. estimates that the Federal Reserve Board's production index dipped last month to approximately 170 of the 1957-59 base. Before it began to slide in July, the index stood at 174.6. Thus, the key indicator may have receded slightly more than its downturn in the 1967 mini-recession.

Two other significant sets of economic statistics, issued on Priday, showed retail sales holding unchanged in December from the November level at $29.5 billion, indicating real volume is actually declining, and the nation's unemployment rate remaining at the low 3.4 percent November level for December. Other labor data, however, such as total employment, overtime and average worker earnings, all showed the slowing aspects of the economy. Other major developments of the week included: • The Treasury's report that redemptions of United States savings bonds in December topped sales by $26 million, the 13th consecutive month of net withdrawals of savings.

• The spread among all the major copper companies of the previous week's 4-cents-s-pound price increase to 56 cents for primary metal.

• The decision of 40 major banks to form a billion-dollar private company to finance exports of jet aircraft and other major products. • The extension for another

An Expert Look at the Exchange Rate System

Par-Value Approach Questioned

By Dr. Ottmar Emminger THE exchange rate system of the world is now undergoing review. The rules of tha par-vaine system, as laid down in the Bratton Woods agreement, were held inviolate for 25 years. Now, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has been asked by its governors. at their last annual meeting in October, -1969, to investigate "whether a limited increase in flexibility of exchange rate variation would be desirable and attainable with the necessary safeguards," What is behind this rising doubt about the present system of fixed par values for currencies a system which, after all, has supported an unprecedented expansion of world trade during the past 20 years?

The doubts have mainly arisen out of the series of violent international monetary crises since the autumn of 1967.

Lessons Learned These crises have taught us a number of lessons: First, major currencies can get so seriously out of line that national and international monetary equilibrium can only be restored by significant adjustments in currency parities, be it through devaluation (Great Britain 1967, France 1969) or through appreciation (West Germany 1969). Second, countries tend to resist such adjustments unduly long, for reasons of political prestige, or out of fear of leap-ing in the dark, or out of fear of rocking the international boat, or finally because of resistance by pressure groups.

Third, the results of these delays are huge speculative flows, distortions in the structure of the respective economies, and in the end more massive and disruptive alterations in nge-rate relationships than might have been required with

A currency which has been undervalued for a prolonged period causes industry to become overly "export-oriented," while an undervalued currency makes industry develop a structural bias for the domestic market If the 143 percent devaluation of the British pound in November, 1967, has taken 1 1/2 years to produce significant results. this is to a large extent due to the preceding prelonged overvaluation and consequent mis-direction of the British econ-

How can we get speedier-adjustment and avoid periodic exchange crises without losing the advantages of a stable exchange-rate system? Freely floating rates without any fixed points of reference (as advocated by professor Milton Fried-man et all can in my opinion safely be ruled out. No one in any responsible position has up to now envisaged going to such extremes. What is under discussion is either a "wider band" or a system of small and more frequent changes in par values or a combination of both. Widening the margins within which market rates may fluctuate above and below par values may mean very different things depending on the degree. If the widening is large enough—say at least 5 percent for other currencies against the dollar, which means 10 percent between the other currencies themselves it gets in practice very near to freely floating

Such a substantial widening does not at present find much support, except perhaps as a transitional device for a single country in order to move toward a new, more realistic parity. There is more support for a very modest widening of the margins, say, from the present I percent, as permitted under the fund's statute, to 2 percent above and below par. This would not contribute significantly to the adjustment of payments imbalances. But would slightly increase the possible swings in emhange rates and thus give central

THE following article was written at the request of the Washington Post by Dr. Emminger, who has played a leading role in international financial affairs for many years. He is generally given a large share of the credit for successful evolution of the Special Drawing Rights (SDR) plan adopted last year by the International Monetary Fund.

banks more operational elbow room against speculative flows. It was for this and only for this purpose that a modest widening was advocated at the last annual meeting of the fund by the British Chancellor of the Exchequer. Weighing the pros with a positive verdict in favor of introducing the legal possibility for a moderately wider band

There is also something to be said for "legitimizing" the temporary adoption of a cubstantially wider band (or even com-plets freedom) as a transition to a new fixed parity, on the model of the "interim float" so successfully practiced by Germany for four weeks before settling definitely upon a new parity at the end of October,

But the introduction of such improved technicalities would hardly deserve the name of "reform." And we should beware of the illusion that many important countries would actually make use of such wider margins; the Common Market countries, for instance, would not, except if they found a way to limit the wider band to exchange-rate relations outside the market while preserving narrower margins inside.

SLIDING PARITIES Reformers who want better and speedier adjustment for payments imbalances look towards the other kind of limited flexibility, i.e., small but more frequent changes in exchange parities. If, for instance, the par value would be adjusted every two months by 0.3 or 0.5 percent, this could easily be accommodated within the normal market swings of the exchange rate, without any sudden jumps, and it would allow an annual parity adjustment of up to 2 or 3 percent. If the direction were known to the public, then the economy, and in particular foreign trade, probably could take such parity changes quite easily in their stride. There need not even be too much fear of destabilizing short-term capital flows, at any rate less then in the present system. This sounds quite attractive, But such a sliding parity adjust-ment (or "flexible parity" or "crawling peg") is not without its problems. First, there may be sudden, unforeseeable funds. mental imbalances (such as the French wage explosion in 1968) which cannot be accommodated within the slow-moving sliding parity adjustment. Second, who should determine the timing and size of the slidto what criteria?

AUTOMATIC FORMULAS NOT ACCEPTABLE-Although most proponents of a crawling peg want this to be entrusted to an automatic formula, which would change parities according to a moving average of past market rates during a reference period, or by reference to movements in currency reserves, or by a combination of both. Such "formula" approach would take parity adjustments out of the hands of politicians and out of the reach of pressure groups.

But it is not quite so simple. Decisions on exchange rates are considered a vital part of economic policy, and I doubt whether any government would commit itself irrevocably to a

Moreover, such automatic formulas, if related to past reference periods or to accidental reserve movements have serious shortcomings that cannot easily be

OPTIONAL CRAWLING PEG-Thus in practice a aliding peg would probably only look acceptable if it was under the deliberate control of the authorities, even if they might make the general direction and maximum limits of the intended adjustment known.

Such "sliding parities" on a potential basis do not easily fit into a generalized system. They would rather require special arrangements between the Monetary Fund and individual countries. The national au-thorities would receive an "allowance" for exchange-rate action within which they could make cumulative small changes in their par value. Such special arrangements could probably be made on the basis of the present statutes of the

Who would be suitable candidates for such slow-moving step-by-step adjustments? There of course, some who feel that with the recent re-alignment of the French and German partitles, the urgency is definitely out of such pro-posals. However, we have also to look ahead into the future. Such a procedure of rate ad-justment would fit all those cases where fundamental payments imbalances arise slowly over the years, either out of basic international shifts in favor (or disfavor) of country's export assortment, or out of clearly discernible structural demand changes in the export or import field, or out of persistent divergencies in relative cost and price move-

We in Germany have seen this latter factor at work over the past four years, where German prices and costs have risen only about one-half as much as those of its major trade partners. The German Minister of Economic Affairs, Prof. Karl Schiller, was asked in parliament a few weeks ago: "What will you do, if the deutsche mark should in a few years' time be offset by price inflation?" To which he replied: "Then it would be much better to make any further exchange-rate adjustment in smaller steps rather. than delay it and thereafter be compelled to adjust by an abrupt and massive jump

If a country deliberately opts out of the international price trend over any length of time, it will indeed have to look for a less disruptive way to adjust its par value than the present abrupt and jumpy method of letting the imbalances ac-cumulate to the breaking point.

But let no one believe that a slow-moving step-by-step parity that would deal painlessly with all the major imbalances in the world economy. Fundamentally the adjustment must always be based on adequate domestic capital would be increased initially to $113.5 million through a new issue of shares to be offered to the public between Jan. 23 and Feb. 28. Other issues would follow.

Nor should anyone believe that it would be easy for a major country to adopt—voluntarily—such a sliding parity adjustment. We should also not overlook the constraints and inhibitions arising for Common Market countries out of regional economic integra-tion. It would, moreover, probably not be easy to fit the U.S. dollar properly into such a scheme. Thus expectations for attaining soon a streamlined exchange-rate eystem should not be pinned too high.

Nixon to Ask New Laws On Strikes

WASHINGTON, Jap. 11 (AP). -Secretary of Labor George P. Shultz indicates that President Nixon will soon propose first major labor-law changes in more than 20 years, to deal with strikes that threaten harm to the nation.

Mr. Shultz hinted in an interview that Mr. Nixon may propose that Congress junk the separate Railway Labor Act covering railroads and airlines and overhaul the 1947 Taft-Hartley Act to cover all big labor-management disoutes.

There has been speculation that President Nixon will propose strike-law changes in his State of the Union Message soon after Congress returns Jan. 19. "That's certainly a distinct possibility," Mr. Shultz said while emphasizing that the final decision is the President's and is still under consideration. Such changes in labor law would be extremely difficult to enact. Similar proposals have never gotten off the ground.

Top spokesmen for both railroad industry and unions oppose abolishing the Railway La-bor Act. The White House reportedly has not cleared its proposals with either labor or business.

Secretary Shultz, preparing for another try at settling the nationwide railroad dispute, said the 44-year-old Railway Lebor Act, the nation's oldest labor law, "has clearly misfired.

48.000 Men Involved

The current wage dispute in-volving 48,000 railroad shop workers in four American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations unions has dragged on for more than a year, despite months of mediation, a 60-day strike delay ordered by Mr. Nixon, and a White House emergency board's recommendations. The unions representing machinists, electricians, boiler-makers and sheet-metal workers are free to strike at any time, but they have pledged not to call a walkout before talks resume Jan. 19, the same day Congress reconvenes. Mr. Shultz and Assistant Secretary of Labor W. J. Usery caloled railroad and union negotiators into a tentative settlement last month, but members of one union, the sheetmetal workers, voted it down. The three other unions voted to accept it, but the four unions had agreed that all must accept a settlement or none The Labor Secretary declined to discuss proposed changes in Taft-Hartley, but other sources said they might include more fact-finding procedures and other means of trying to achieve peaceful settlements. Secretary Shultz said Mr. Nixon is not ready to propose

Mr. Shultz said, "Essentially, disputes that create emergencles are inherently difficult problems and you look for solutions that don't have too many bad features in them, both from the standpoint of protecting the public's interest in continued operation and also protecting the vitality of the bar-

East opened one spade, and South passed with the inten-tion of bidding clubs later. It turned out that he had to do so at the level of five when West scraped up a spade raise and East made a wild jump to four spades with a hand not even worth a game invitation.

North was annoyed to hear his partner bid five clubs, for he was looking forward to defending four spades. East doubled on principle how could South make 11 tricks when he could not bid originally? But it was not a good principle.
North's irritation with his partner's bid evaporated as the play developed. As the bidding and opening lead of the spade three marked East with the spade ace. South could afford to play the nine from dummy. If East had produced the ten. the declarer would still have been able to ruff out the spade ace and make two tricks in the

As South hoped, the spade nine forced the ace and he ruffed. The club deuce had a value for entry purposes, so he led the club six to dummy's queen, removing both the missing trumps. The winning spades were let out, and the three hearts were discarded from the closed hand.

Twelve tricks could have been claimed at this point, but South wanted all he could get. He led a small heart from dummy, and East, perhaps upset by the way the play was going, played his heart king. South ruffed high, led the club seven to the nine in dummy, and played the heart jack. East had to

CULTURE AND COMMITMENT: A STUDY OF THE GENERATION GAP By Margaret Mead. Doubleday: Natural History Press.

113 pp. $5. Reviewed by John Leonard

Ross MACDONALD, in his most recent novel Goodbye Look," has his detective Lew Archer tell a young woman: "I don't believe people know everything at birth and forget it as they get older." Raymond Aron, in his most recent book, "The Elusive Revo-lu, on," observes: "A professor would have to be very ignorant indeed to be more ignorant than his students, particularly in their first years at university." Margaret Mead, in this sim volume of shining intelligence, sees the situation from a less comfortable point of view. The young, she says, know something the rest of us refuse to admit. They know that "there are no adults anywhere in the world from whom they learn what the next steps should What the next steps should be . . a deceptively simple and ultimately horrify-ing formulation to describe that most notorious of holes, the generation gap.

For the dissident young, writes Dr. Mead, "the past . . . is a colossal, unintelligible failure and the future may hold nothing but the destruction of the planet." One needn't subscribe wholly to such an apoealyptic vision. But something is going on in the United States, Latin America. France. Germany. Czechoslovakia and Japan that can't be sloughed off. Dr.-Mead suggests that the something is a new world culture, which she calls "prefigurative," conspired at by transistor radios, space satellites and hydrogen bombs, but based upon a profound revision of authority roles, the nature of dependency and the "location of the future."

Her concepts are perfectly straightforward. In a "postfigurative" culture - primitive societies, small religious and ideological enclaves—children learn primarily from their forebears. Authority derives from the past, from grandparents who, because change is almost imperceptible, "cannot conceive of any other future . . . than their own pasts." In a time-less culture, the oldest among us is the inevitable model; the youngest, the child, is so much silly-putty on which a role is

In a "coffgurative" culturesuch "great civilizations" as our own, incorporating change—both children and adults learn from their peers, playmates, fraternity brothers, colleagues. The grand-father, hopelessly anachronistic, has been wheeled off to the nearest gerontion garden for figs and estrogen. The father often abdicates his responsibil-ity to a surrogate: the teacher, the employer. Caste wars with ssimilation. The past is irrelevant. People, after a certain amount of use, are obsolescent.
"Prefigurative" culture is what is happening to us. The young. in their apprehension of "the still unknown future," assume new authority; teach us by asking questions we were too busy to worry about; require of us a murture, an environment, that instead of pressing forms

Baseball to Take Steps to Strengthen Its Security Against Gambling

NEW YORK, Jan. 11 (NYT), Major major league baseball is taking steps to strengthen its security against professional gambling. The game has been free of major betting scandals for 50 years, but is moving to protect itself in a time of increased gambling in most sports.

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn declined to confirm the report yesterday, but he did acknowledge that for some months he had been leaning in this direction. He is expected to announce soon that he has hired a security official who will pairol all 24 teams any such move had been prompted by the current federal inves-tigation of sports gembling, which has focused so far chickly on

Observer

WASHINGTON.—Cold weather occurred in Washington week, as it usually does during January, and there were the usual problems.

The first of these, common to every bousehold, is what conversational response to make to the person who goes outside breakfast to pick up 'he morning newspaper. This person opens the door, picks up the paper, slams the door and comes into the breakfast circle declaring, with very few variations, "Boy, it's cold out "here!"

What is the reply to "Boy it's cold out there"? It is, after all, January. At this latitude, it would be odd if it were not cold out there. Moreover, having listened to the radio while shaving and been advised by a man with a lifeless monotone who is said to represent the Weather Bureau that the official temperature is eight degrees Fahrenheit, you have the United States government's testimony that it is cold. Evc. without it, you have probably noticed that because of an icy glaze oo the window panes this morning it is impossible to see out the window and deduced from this that it is cold out

In comes the hero from re-trieving the newspaper. "Boy, it's cold out there!" he declares with the pleasure peculiar to persons aware that they are breaking a piece of bad news. Does one say: "Obviously, you idiot!" and deflate him? It is not recommended, since the early-morning "Boy, It's cold out there!" is usually rendered by some member of the family capable of making life intolerable if put into a bad mood.

Attempts to spin the matter into prolonged conversation ("No kidding! Cold out there, eb? Sitting here, I wouldn't have thought it was one degrea Fahrenhelt below 72,") may just as dangerous, since they are likely to be mistaken for heavy sarcasm

Perhaps the soundest re-sponse to "Boy, it's really cold out there!" is a judicious "Hmm," uttered after some thoughtful stroking of the chin, On the other hand, an enthusiastic "Let me see the paper so I can check the weather report" may enable the quick-witted to seize possession of the sports section while pretending to study the pressure gradient over central you?" is meant to force you into a witty repartee, but even Oscar Wilde would have been hard pressed to frame lt. Last July this very same man probably inquired whether it "hot enough for you?" What, indeed, are your personal ideal maximum minimum environmental temperatures? In dealing with the man who wants to know, the recommended response at the moment is a noncommittal This is some weather, eh?" Satisfaction can be had at his expense later by waiting for a perfectly average day in early May or mid-October and leaving him nonplussed by asking, "Is it temperate enough for

There is, of co se, the man for whom it is definitely not cold enough. As soon as the temperature drops into the vicinity of zero, he becomes inescapable. He comes from upper Minnesota, outer Labraor the expeditions of Adm. Byrd. When one weather bore in the room makes the mistake of asking him: "Is It cold enough for you?" this one rises in a magnificeot spume of contempt.

"Cold?" he asks, sneering at the word's lack of chill, "Do you mean to say this is what yon people call cold?" man has been in Duluth when it was so cold that his breath condensed into solid ice, fell on his shoe and broke his toe. Why, man, we people don't know what cold is! Why, one year there in Greenland-In all likelihood, it will be pretty cold here next January. too, but first there will be summer, and it will get hot. "Boy, It's hot out there!"

"Hmm." "How you standing "How you standing at?" "Heat? Do you this beat?" mean to say this is what you

Dynamic Conceptual Spin-Offs

By Israel Shenker

NEW YORK, Jan. 11 (NYT).—About ten years ago, for purposes not yet clear to him, Robert K. Merton, a sociologist of Columbia University, prepared a "plus words"-words that had drifted from the social sciences into the vernacular.

Today they are minus: the human condition, hidden persuader, organization man, status-seeker, mass culture, high-, middle- and low-brow, captains of culture, exurbanite,

Plus or minus, jargon elevates, obscures or does both simultaneously. To closk research in majesty one speaks of 'realm of inquiry" and "conceptualizers" to "precipitate lines of reasoning."

Prof. Merton defines jargon as "verbal coin whose value has been depreciated by excessive and indiscriminate use." The inflationary coin of this realm is quickly spent: fashions in jargon change as quickly as fashions in fashion. Yesterdby's "ins" (ingroup, inner-directed; are out, and the "outs" (out-group) are, too.

Art of the Game

To establish one's superlority over outsiders is the game of this name. How to distinguish between the dislect of necessity—the technical rocabulary of every profession and trade-and the "necessity of dialect-jargon-is the art of the

"The charge of jargon, like the charge of being 2 Typbold Mary or a Communist, ought to be subject to the laws of libel," said Professor Merton, adding: "Each case must be judged on its own

Study of academic journals and interviews with professors reveal that the academic conceptualizers are obsessed by activity. All things-even bureaucracy,

"ARGON elevates, obscures, or does both simultaneously . . . How to distinguish between the dialect of necessity—the technical rocabulory of every profession and trade—and the necessity of dialect-jargon-is the art of the gome."

lethargy and silence-are, therefore, said to have "dynamics."

When the dynamic slows and action alone leaves something to be desired, jargon prefers words like interaction and erent-interaction-and other compound concepts such as interdisciplinary (unfailingly good) and interrelationship (fructifying).

Compounding raises the interest; problem-solving, policy-maker, decision-maker, overview, socio-economo, cross-sectional. consensus - building, psycho - evaluation. psychodrams, game-analysable (and nongame-enalyzable), and reality testing: An article in the September-October issue of the Columbia Journal of World Business speaks of crops that are "fertilizer-thsponsive."

Evasion-responsive academics call facts "supportive" and techniques "innovative".

If proof is less than total, it may be said to have the "ring of authenticity."

To Be LDC or UDC

Countries are no longer backward, but "undeveloped" or—much better—imder-developed," "less developed," "advancing" or "emerging." When abbreviated, the disadvantaged countries seem almost advantaged. Thus, LDO (less-developed countries) and UDC (underdeveloped countries) lend verbal richness where East is East and West is West, but.in

. jargon the orient guides best. Specialists speak of authority-oriented and process oriented. The older generation is youth-oriented and the younger generation problem-oriented, which really means problem-disoriented. Encompassing confusion is "Western-oriented," but as Prof. Leon Lipson of Yale Law School said. "this may be only occidental."

In pursuit of jargon, nouns transmute into adjectives, with authors writing of interventionary behavior," "frictional violence." "insightful," societal" and "de-

Verbs change into adjectives: differentiable, distractible and nondistractible. In the journal Foreign Affairs last October, McGeorge Bundy cited the phrase "assured survivable destruction capability" (the military is especially happy with 'capability').

Verbs assume substance as nouns: heritables, heritability. Nouns lose substance as verbs (to operationalize) and enter a higher realm as longer nouns; protesta-tion, contexualization, testability.

Out of familiar matrices, many words automatically become jargon; threshold ("threshold of force"), apparatus ("apparatus of learning") structures (never in construction), accommodation (nothing to do with rooms), mertial lag (nothing Strategist, behaviorist, Marxist, free-cap asked a young waitress at the Cavendish Club in Sheffield, England. An innocuous enough question, but not when it's asked by a ghost. At first the management pooh-poohed complaints about a ghost after the club opened two years ago. "We were inclined to dismiss them as a trick of the lighting or bad cases of vivid imagination." situation became acute when the staff began to quit: One wait-ress who spied the ghost relaxing at a corner table lost her nerve, ran terrified from the club and hasn't returned. the owners contacted Canon H. D. McKee, choir director at Sheffield . Cathedral, and after getting the go-ahead from the Bishop of Sheffield, brought in an unidentified Anglican priest.
